

1 The Dragons of England

2

3 It is a well-known fact that, up to a few hundred years ago, dragons
4 roamed England's skies. These dragons stood over seven metres high,
5 were covered in tough, armoured scales, had huge, sharp claws, and fiery
6 breath. They attacked villages, captured maidens and set forests on fire.
7 Dragons were all powerful and the people of England were terrified of 8 them. So why are we not terrified of dragons today? Where did all the 9 dragons go?

10

11 The main reason why Dragons have gone extinct is invention of anti-
12 dragon spray. Every person living in England was given a bottle of 'Go
13 Dragon Go'. Consequently, every time a dragon approached, they could 14 spray the dragon making its scales so itchy it would fly away.

15

16 After they flew away, they hid in the Great Stinky Swamp of the North.
17 This is where all the dragons in England hid because there were no
18 humans. Since none of the dragons' usual food (gooseberries, cabbage 19 and asparagus) grew in the swamp, instead they ate swamp-lettuce.

20

21 However, the dragons found swamp-lettuce too tasty and absolutely
22 delicious which caused them to eat every leaf of every plant they could 23 find. Owing to the fact that they ate so much, swamp-lettuce became 24 rarer and rarer. Finally, lack of food led to dragon infighting. The 25 dragons fought so fiercely they killed each other.

26

27 For these reasons, dragons finally became extinct in England. Swamp
28 lettuce is still thriving. It tastes absolutely disgusting to people.
